Bangladesh's Approach to International Law

Bangladesh is a South Asian least developed country (LDC). In 1971, Bangladesh emerged as a new state by exercising the right to self-determination in post-colonial context. It shares the common grievance of colonial past with other Third World countries. In 2018, Bangladesh started the graduation process from an LDC. Throughout, this journey, international law was congenial to the economic development of Bangladesh. Since the genesis, international law shaped the state practice of Bangladesh and the country has also contributed to the progressive development of international law.
