Short Course in Tourism and Hotel Operations

Equity , Efficiency and Excellence through Life Long Learning

Department of Social Studies

The Tourist Industry

One of the special characteristics of the Tourism Industry is its ability to show resilience in the face of any crisis. The present pandemic which has affected all people of the world is also another crisis which has shown signs of fading off. In Sri Lanka tourist arrivals have increased and shown positive results in producing a good tourist season. This short course, which is now offered online, will help you prepare for the future and engage in the tourism industry. This is a basic entry level qualification.

It has been estimated that the tourism industry in Sri Lanka would require over 200,000 persons directly and a further 300,000 indirectly to service the needs of the visitors to the country. Added to this, is the demand created by the intensified activities in the emerging tourist destinations in Asia and the Middle East resulting in a continuous drain of trained staff to other countries.

Objective of the Online Course

To train students at basic level in the fast developing tourism and hotel industry.

Course Description

This is a short course conducted online. The Learning Management System (LMS) called MOODLE will be used to deliver the entire course using the learnoul platform. Lesson materials and assignments will be posted on learnoul and students can respond also through the same medium. Instead of day schools, we will conduct meetings and lectures online using ZOOM. Students need not visit the Open University to follow lectures. While there are several advantages in this system, the biggest advantage is that students from any part of the country can participate without having to visit the University.
